PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR RULING USE OF EVIDENCE OF DEFENDANT'S FINANCIAL CONDITION

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

8055601077;

DOCUMENTARY AND TESTIMONIAL EVIDENCE OF DEFENDANT'S FINANCIAL CONDITION ON AND AFTER THE AIRING OF "LIVING WITH MICHAEL JACKSON," AS DISTINCT FROM EXPERT OPINION EVIDENCE, IS PLAINLY RELEVANT AND ADMISSIBLE ON THE ISSUE OF DEFENDANT'S MOTIVE TO CONSPIRE TO COMMIT THE CRIMES ALLEGED IN COUNT ONE OF THE INDICTMENT

A. Introduction:

The People previously moved the Court for permission to introduce the testimony of an expert concerning the state of defendant's finances at times relevant to this lawsuit. That motion was opposed. On January 28, 2005, the Court ruled as follows:

Attorneys Auchincloss and Sanger addressed the Court re: Plaintiff's Motion in Limine for Admission of Expert Testimony on Defendant's Finances and Application for Order that the Defense Response to the District Attorney's Motion in Limine for Admission of Expert Testimony on Defendant's Finances, Dated January 21, 2005 be Withdrawn. The Court finds that general testimony as it relates to this particular situation may be admissible, but the Court shall reserve ruling at this time. The Court further orders that a 402 hearing shall be held if such witnesses are called."

(Emphasis added.)

In his Opening Statement, the District Attorney attempted to inform the jury that evidence of defendant's financial condition at relevant times would be introduced. That statement was objected to, and the Court sustained the objection. And when Witness Ann Gabriel was questioned on direct examination concerning the issue of defendant's financial condition at the time "Living with Michael Jackson" was aired, first in the United Kingdom and then in the United States, objection to her testimony was sustained.

The evidence the District Attorney referred to in his opening statement was documentary evidence (e.g., defendant's bank records, other business records obtained in the course of searches, and admissible statements of individuals with first-hand knowledge of the subject), not to an expert's opinion evidence. Likewise, Ann Gabriel could competently have testified concerning her knowledge of some aspects of defendant's financial situation.

B. Evidence of Defendant's Straightened Financial Circumstance At Relevant Times Is Important Evidence Of His Motive To Conspire With Others To Mitigate The Disastrous Effect Of The Airing Of Living With Michael Jackson

A fair amount of energy has been devoted to obtaining documentary evidence of defendant's financial situation at the time the bad news about "Living with Michael Jackson" was conveyed to him. Testimony before the grand jury touched on that issue. Search warrants were upheld against the argument that they impermissibly trenched on defendant's privacy. And as noted, the Court very recently stated its finding that "general testimony as it relates to this particular situation may be admissible."

Plaintiff believes that such evidence is relevant on the critical issue of defendant's motive to join with others in a conspiracy to commit the crimes alleged in Count One of the Indictment.

In his opening statement on behalf of defendant, Mr. Mesercau plainly sought to distance his client from defendant's alleged co-conspirators by stating the evidence would show that whatever business schemes they may have cooked up in his name and even over his signature (never mind their acts of sequestering the Doe family and extorting their cooperation in the making of the "rebuttal video" on defendant's behalf, if only for the income it might generate), Michael Jackson the Artist was kept in ignorance of them. The suggestion that Mr. Jackson was unaware of the state of his finances before or after "Living with Michael Jackson" threatened his very livelihood simply underscores the importance of evidence of Mr. Jackson's declining financial situation and the reasons for that decline.

"Living with Michael Jackson" broke like a thunderclap over defendant and those whose own financial well-being depended on Mr. Jackson's ability to continue to earn income even as his career was well into its decline. Plaintiff believes that defendant was experiencing severe "liquidity" problems before "Living with Michael Jackson" was aired, due in part to his own profligate spending habits and in part to a general decline in sales of his record albums. If that is so, the parlous state of his finances in January, 2003 is acutely relevant to explain the motive for the actions undertaken by the co-conspirators with defendant's approval and collaboration.

But, of course, Plaintiff's belief that defendant had a financial motive to keep the Doe family from making unhelpful statements to the paparazzi is not evidence. The evidence of his financial condition at that pivotal time in his career is the documentary material gathered by the investigators in this case and studied by them over the last several months. It explains the motive for the drastic steps undertaken by the conspirators to minimize the potential for further adverse commentary on defendant's close relationship with young John Doe. For very good reason, the relevance of that evidence has been regarded as an a priori proposition by Plaintiff.

The People respectfully, and most urgently, request the Court to consider for itself the relevance of documentary evidence of defendant's financial circumstances (as distinct from an expert's opinion of that evidence) to the motivation of the conspirators to isolate the Doe family and secure their cooperation in a "rebuttal video" that, as defense counsel acknowledged to the jury in his opening statement, held the promise of considerable income from commercial television stations eager for a follow-up to "Living with Michael Jackson."
