PLAINTIFF'S FOLLOW-UP
MEMORANDUM REGARDING DEFENDANT'S CLAIM OF
ATTORNEY WORK-PRODUCT
PRIVILEGE FOR "ITEM 818"
SEIZED IN WARRANTED
SEARCH OF INVESTIGATOR
MILLER'S OFFICE

DATE: April 2, 2004

TIME: 8:30 A.M.

DEPT: SM 2 (Melville)

21 Introduction:

22 By its "Findings and Order Re: Claims of Work Product Privilege," filed March 11, 23 2004, the Court barred access by the prosecution to "Item 818," an audiotape of an interview by 24 a defense investigator for Attorney Mark Geragos of unidentified individuals, on the ground 25 that because it is "qualified work product," "the balance weighs against release of the 26 audiotape" to the prosecution.

27 The People requested reconsideration by the Court of that aspect of its Findings and 28 Order. We argued that lawfully seized, relevant evidence is not protected from inspection by

1 the prosecution in a criminal case because it is "qualified work product." Only "core" work
2 product is so privileged, we asserted.

3 The Court calendared the request for reconsideration for hearing on April 2, 2004,
4 and has asked counsel

5 to be prepared to comment on the following possible line of analysis.
6 Prior to the passage of Proposition 115, the California Supreme
7 Court held that the work product doctrine applied to criminal cases
8 and protects the work product of defense investigators. [See People
9 v. Collie (1981) 30 C3d 43, 59]. Penal Code § 1054.6 and the 10 Supreme Court's observation at Izazaga v. Sup. Ct. (1991) 54 C.3d
11 356, 382, fn. 19, have specific references to issues in criminal
12 discovery. Does, then, the broader protection for qualified work 13 product privilege have application before a criminal defendant has 14 been held to answer or indicted?

15 This Memorandum is respectfully offered for consideration by the Court and 16 opposing counsel in anticipation of argument on April 2nd.

17 "ITEM 818" WAS SEIZED IN OBEDIENCE TO A SEARCH
18 WARRANT, AS EVIDENCE WHICH MIGHT FURTHER A 19 CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION. THAT INVESTIGATION IS ON-
20 GOING. UNLESS THE EVIDENCE IS OF SUCH A NATURE
21 THAT IT MAY NEVER BE CONSIDERED BY THE 22 PROSECUTION, IT IS MAKES NO SENSE TO BAR THE 23 GOVERNMENT'S ACCESS TO IT UNTIL THE DEFENDANT
24 HAS BEEN HELD TO ANSWER OR INDICTED

25 In our respectful submission, a careful reading of the Supreme Court's decision
26 in People v. Superior Court (Laff) (2001) 25 Cal.4th 703 ("Laff") provides an answer to the 27 Court's question whether the broader protection afforded by the qualified work product
28 privilege has application to the case of a criminal defendant before he has been held to answer or indicted.

Laff mandated the procedure – largely modeled on the procedure upheld by the Court of Appeal in People v. Superior Court (Bauman & Rose) (1995) 37 Cal.App.4th 1757
("Bauman & Rose") – of an in-camera hearing, even prior to the filing of a complaint in a criminal case, to determine whether evidence seized pursuant to warrant in a criminal

1 investigation was privileged from disclosure to the government.

2 In doing so, Laff rejected the People's argument "that neither the attorney-client
3 privilege nor the work-product doctrine precludes disclosure of documents properly seized
4 under a valid search warrant." (Id., at p. 712.)

5 The People claim that the doctrine precludes disclosure of attorney
6 work product only during discovery, and that a search warrant is not 7 a tool of discovery. Therefore, according to the People, a hearing to 8 determine the applicability of the work-product doctrine would serve
9 no purpose. Contrary to the People's position, however, the work-
10 product doctrine applies outside the context of formal discovery
11 between parties to a pending action.

12 (Id., at p. 717; italics the court's.)

13 Laff noted that "the work-product doctrine is codified in [Code of Civil Procedure]
14 section 2018. . . . Pursuant to subdivision (c) of section 2018, '[a]ny writing that reflects an 15 attorney's impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal research or theories shall not be 16 discoverable under any circumstances.' (Italics added.)" (Ibid.)

17 The work-product doctrine expressly is made applicable to criminal 18 cases by Penal Code section 1054.6, which states: "Neither the 19 defendant nor the prosecuting attorney is required to disclose any 20 materials or information which are work product as defined in 21 subdivision (c) of Section 2018 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or 22 which are privileged pursuant to an express statutory provision, or 23 are privileged as provided by the Constitution of the United States."
24 (See Izazaga v. Superior Court (1991) 54 Cal.3d 356, 380-382;
25 People v. Collie (1981) 30 Cal.3d 43, 59 [holding, before enactment
26 of Penal Code section 1054.6, that the work-product doctrine applies
27 in criminal cases].)

28 (Ibid.)

Subdivision (c) defines what is referred to as "core" work product, as distinct from what is known as "qualified work product," protected in civil cases by subdivision (b) of the same section. The Laff court's reference to "the work-product doctrine . . . applicable to 1 criminal cases" is, then, a reference to "core work product" and only core work product. Laff

2 said nothing that would suggest that qualified work product, as distinct from "core" work
3 product, was likewise privileged from access by investigators pursuing a criminal investigation.
4 It cited a number of cases, both state and federal, "holding that materials seized pursuant to a
5 search warrant, as part of a criminal investigation, are protected by the work-product doctrine"
6 (id., pp. 718-719). All of those cases involved core work product.

7 The Supreme Court noted that "If law enforcement authorities were permitted to 8 seize and inspect privileged items that would be protected against discovery in a criminal 9 proceeding, the prosecution simply could delay filing charges until a search warrant for those 10 items is executed. Although the prosecution could not introduce the privileged information 11 discovered by such a search as evidence in the proceeding, it nevertheless could use the 12 information in preparing its case and thereby gain an unfair advantage over individuals
13 intended to be protected by the privilege." (Id., p. 719; italics added.) But of course, only 14 "core" work product is "protected against discovery in a criminal proceeding" by Penal Code
15 section 1054.6.

16 The Laff court upheld the procedure earlier approved by Bauman & Rose: "[T]he 17 superior court has an obligation to consider and determine claims that materials seized pursuant 18 to a search warrant . . . are protected by the attorney-client privilege or work-product doctrine
19 and thus should not be inspected by or disclosed to law enforcement authorities." (Id., p. 720.)
20 But as noted, the only kind of "work product" that is protected from inspection in a criminal 21 case is core work product.

22 Laff intended that evidence seized pursuant to a warrant and as to which a claim of 23 privilege had been asserted would be kept from inspection by government investigators until –
24 and only until – the claim, if contested, could be adjudicated in an in-camera hearing and found
25 to have merit. The Supreme Court noted that "The superior court did not err in ordering that 26 the documents seized from the attorneys remain under seal pending resolution of their claims."
27 (Id., pp. 720-721, n. 8; italics added.)

28 ////

1 In summary, Laff held that only “core” work product is “privileged” from disclosure
2 to and inspection by investigators in criminal cases, because the Legislature has accorded that 3 privilege only to core work product in a criminal proceeding. In a criminal investigation in 4 which evidence has been seized pursuant to warrant and a claim is asserted that some or all of 5 the evidence is protected from disclosure as “attorney work product,” the holder of that
6 privilege is entitled to a prompt, in-camera hearing on the merits of his claim before the seized
7 evidence may be disclosed to the investigators and inspected by them.

8 The People were mindful of Laff's holding when the warrants were sought and 9 executed in this case. Laff involved a search of lawyers' offices, while here the premises
10 searched belonged to a private investigator. But private investigators frequently work for 11 attorneys, and there was absolutely no hesitation of the part of the searching officers in this
12 case to accept Attorney Daniel Nixon's assertion of attorney-client and work product privileges 13 and in securing the evidence without examining it pending this court's determination of the 14 validity of his claims.

15 To paraphrase Laff, this Court has “resolved the claims,” in precisely the fashion
16 approved by the Bauman & Rose decision and mandated by Laff. It forthrightly declared that 17 “None of the tapes at issue in this proceeding qualify for absolute work product protection.”
18 (Order 2:18-19.)

19 That being the case, the investigation properly interrupted by the timely assertion of 20 the only privileges that apply in a criminal prosecution to evidence seized from a third party –
21 the privilege against disclosure of attorney-client communications and “absolute” attorney
22 work product – should now be permitted to proceed in the usual fashion.

23 Evidence entitled to the status of “qualified work product” is not privileged from 24 disclosure in a criminal investigation or a later prosecution, because the Legislature has made it 25 crystal-clear that only “core work product” enjoys that privileged protection from disclosure in 26 a criminal case.

27 The answer to this Court's question, “Does . . . the broader protection [of the]
28 qualified work product privilege have application before a criminal defendant has been held to

1 answer or indicted" must, then, be "No." The qualified work-product privilege applies only to
2 discovery in civil cases. Prosecutorial discovery in criminal cases is limited by Penal Code
3 section 1054.3 and, with respect to "work product," by section 1054.6 ("core" work product
4 only). The government's access to work-product evidence seized in a warranted search enjoys
5 no greater protection.

6 For purposes of an ongoing investigation, access to evidence seized in a warranted
7 search is limited by Laff and earlier cases, and by statute, only to evidence of attorney-client
8 communications and to core work product. Laff mandates an in-camera hearing expressly for 9 the important but limited purpose of obtaining a judicial determination whether core work
10 product had been seized. "Qualified" work product may well further a criminal investigation, 11 but it is not protected from inspection for that reason. If the Supreme Court had intended in 12 Laff to have qualified work product as well as core work product identified in the hearing and 13 thereafter shielded from disclosure until the target of the investigation had been indicted or 14 held to answer, it surely would have said so.
