presumption that a vindictive prosecution has occurred. (Opposition, page 3.) This is not the case. Mr. Jackson is not talking about a presumption, let alone an "inflexible presumption." Given the facts of this case, articulated in Mr. Jackson's motions, Mr. Jackson submits to the Court that the uncontested facts demonstrate that this is a vindictive prosecution. Interestingly, the facts that we have provided in this motion and the concurrently filed motion have not been controverted by the District Attorney's papers. Whether or not there is a presumption created, the District Attorney has the burden of confronting the facts set forth in Mr. Jackson's motions.

The District Attorney does not deny that an "immense amount of government resources...

have been devoted to" this case and that "there has been more investigation on this case than in capital murder cases or complex white collar prosecutions." (Opposition, page 4.) Instead, the District Attorney asserts that Mr. Jackson's argument that he is being treated differently is "embarrassingly post hoc" and that he is simply being prosecuted "because he is believed to have committed a crime." The unusual procedure followed by the prosecution, amount of government resources devoted to this case, "regrettable" behavior of the District Attorney, and amount of investigation belie the District Attorney's argument. Mr. Jackson is clearly being treated differently than any other person accused of child molestation in the history of Santa Barbara County. The District Attorney does not attempt to justify this different treatment because it cannot be justified.

AS SET FORTH IN MR. JACKSON'S MOTIONS. THE PROSECUTION HAS ENGAGED IN OUTRAGEOUS CONDUCT

The District Attorney's response to the outrageous government conduct portion of Mr. Jackson's motion restates Mr. Jackson's position in mocking tones, but does not deny most of the uncontested factual statements in Mr. Jackson's moving papers.

The prosecution claims that, "[o]nly three warrants issued subsequent to the defendant's indictment implicated his privacy interests and only one of them - notably, not the second warrant recently approved for the search of Neverland Ranch - has been contested." (Opposition, page 5.) This statement does not make any sense.

Three of the invasions of Mr. Jackson's privacy on his property occurred in the 19931994 period of time. At least one of those searches was contested in a hearing on a motion to suppress and return evidence, before the Honorable Judge Slater of the Santa Barbara Superior Court.

In this case, there were two search warrants issued for the search of Mr. Jackson's residence executed on November 18, 2003. Both of those warrants were contested before this Court. There was a warrant for Mr. Jackson's lawyer's investigator that was contested in two separate motions before this Court. There was a search warrant for Mr. Jackson's assistant that was contested in this case. There were then two search warrants executed on December 3, 2004. On of these warrants was for Mr. Jackson's residence and the other was for his person. Both of these search warrants are the subject of a motion concurrently filed in this case.

Other search warrants pertained to Mr. Jackson's bank records, phone records, or other personal records of Mr. Jackson, himself. Therefore, the assault by scarch warrant on Mr. Jackson has been substantial and comprehensive. However, the number and nature of the search warrants is only on a small part of the overall pattern by the District Attorney.

Nowhere does the prosecution deny that they have executed more search warrants in this case than in a capital homicide case or in a complex white collar fraud case. The prosecution does not deny that it engaged in the conduct detailed in Mr. Jackson's papers. Nowhere has Mr. Jackson ever said, in the mocking words of Mr. Franklin, "I am a celebrity; therefore I am being prosecuted." (Opposition, page 5.) However, he has said that he is entitled to no more, but no less, protection than any other person accused of a crime. The District Attorney's response essentially asserts that the prosecution is allowed to pile on, and viewed cynically, that he is not allowed to object because he is a celebrity.

The District Attorney's response does not address the conduct complained about in the concurrently filed motion. There the objection was based on: (1) the District Attorney's outrageous conduct in seeking more than 100 search warrants; (2) the District Attorney's outrageous conduct in requesting a search warrant for Mr. Jackson's home on the eve of the discovery cutoff and so close to trial; (3) the nature of the material to be seized does not raise an issue of exigency; (4) the fact that Mr. Jackson has been treated differently than any other person within the jurisdiction of this county: and (5) the District Attorney's outrageous conduct in intruding on Mr. Jackson and his family's right to privacy in his home by conducing an unnecessary raid.

Furthermore, the searches were simply an unnecessary opportunity for the government to flex its muscles and to shock and intimidate Mr. Jackson, and to distract his counsel. That is the essence of Mr. Jackson's motions. None of that is controverted by the District Attorney's response. None of that is responded to or justified by the District Attorney except to say that investigations and prosecutions tend to rely on the judgment of the prosecutors and that the defendant's opinion is rarely sought. That, in fact, is the essence of Mr. Jackson's complaint.

The Court warned the District Attorney that its judgment was flawed in continuing to seek search warrants so close to trial. Mr. Sneddon summarily dismissed the Court's opinion. The prosecution obtained the search warrants because they could, not because it was necessary or proper at this stage in the proceedings. And yes, the prosecution should have sought Mr. Jackson, or his counsel's, opinion - that is what a noticed motion is all about.
